Chicago's unseasonable warm weather broke a 36-year-old record Saturday, marking the second consecutive day of record high February temperatures.

The previous record high for Feb. 18 was 62 degrees in 1981, according to National Weather Service meteorologist Matt Friedlein. Saturday's temperature at O'Hare International Airport surpassed that record by 11:25 a.m. and had reached 69 degrees as of 2 p.m. He said it could get one or two degrees warmer before temperatures start to drop again this evening.

Friday's pleasant weather also broke a record set more than a century earlier when the high reached 67 degrees, the weather service said. The previous record of 60 degrees was set on Feb. 17, 1880.
